Naysayers can't digest GDP growth, says PM

Defends 7.8% figure, says has enthused nation

AGENCIES
New Delhi, September 5

DEFENDING THE GDP numbers released recently by the government, Prime Minister Narendra Modi on Saturday said: "The 7.8% growth has enthused the country. This comes at a time when a war is on in West Asia. This shows India's capability. But those known for pushing India into the fragile five cannot digest these figures."

Referring to the controversy over the numbers, the PM, addressing the centenary celebrations of Shri Ram College of Commerce (SRCC) in Delhi, said the country has come a long way from policy paralysis in 2013 to policy dynamism, but those responsible for pushing India into the 'fragile 5' are now unable to digest its 7.8% growth. India's GDP growth amid global uncertainty reflects its economic strength, Modi said. Recalling an address made at the college in 2013 as Gujarat chief minister, Modi said: "In 2013, when I came to SRCC, I presented a vision. I gave the example of a glass filled with water. I said there are people who can see the glass as fully filled, half with water and half with air." It was a time, PM Modi said, when the country was lacking hope. "So I said, 'I see the glass as fully filled'. At that time, development was at its lowest; inflation had hit the skies, scandals were at their peak, and the corrupt roamed fearlessly," he said.

URVI MALVANIA
Mumbai, September 5

HYPERVAULT AI DATA Center, a subsidiary of Tata Consultancy Services (TCS), has secured 264 acres in Hyderabad to develop a large-scale artificial intelligence data centre campus with capacity of up to 1 gigawatt. HyperVault and its partners are expected to invest up to ₹70,000 crore to build and manage the campus, which will be purpose-built to serve frontier AI companies and hyperscalers. The campus will support high-density GPU deployments for AI training, inference and advanced computing workloads. The development will be

Singapore govt won't interfere in Air India issue

BLOOMBERG

THE SINGAPORE GOVERNMENT said on Saturday it will not interfere in any decision that Singapore Airlines makes in Air India, which is said to be seeking financial aid from its shareholders. Singapore Air has the responsibility to "assess its investments in Air India in relation to the resources it has for the long-term growth and profitability of the company," Senior Minister K Shanmugam told reporters. It's the Singapore government's principle to not intervene in individual investment decisions, or put political pressure, he said. "Once governments or politicians start directing individual investment decisions, commercial discipline will be compromised," according to a transcript of his comments.

Maruti's launch blitz fails to move market share

At 40% share, carmaker finds growth stagnant

VIKRAM CHAUDHARY
New Delhi, September 5

THE BALENO FACELIFT launched on Saturday evening was the fourth fresh product by Maruti Suzuki in less than a year. The rollout began on September 15 last year with the Victoris — an all-new nameplate that proved to be a massive hit with sales of 1,21,513 units between September 2025 and July 2026. It was followed by the unveiling of the all-electric eVitara in December last year, which saw deliveries start in February and quickly crossed the 10,000-unit sales mark. Then came the facelifted Brezza on July 24, which garnered over 55,000 bookings within 35 days of launch. With the updated Fronx expected shortly, Maruti

Suzuki is on an unprecedented launch blitz. And yet, despite these successes, the market leader's share has failed to move. The January-July 2026 sales data collated from the Society of Indian Automobile Manufacturers (SIAM) shows that the carmaker had a market share of 40.3% during January-July 2026, down from 40.6% during the same period last year.

Jio sets sights on global markets

PRESS TRUST OF INDIA
New Delhi, September 5

DIGITAL SERVICES MAJOR Jio has set its sights on the global market with made-in-India tech across connectivity, digital products, enterprise solutions, and artificial intelligence, a top company official said on Saturday.

Jio Platforms Managing Director and Reliance Jio Chairman Akash Ambani, in a letter to employees on 10 years of Jio, said the organisation has built the foundation of Digital India at an unprecedented scale, accelerated the country's transition to 5G, connected homes and businesses while continuing to expand technology for the people of the nation.

"Jio today is much more than a telecom company. We are building original technology in India across connectivity, digital products, enterprise solutions and AI. The opportunity before us is to continue making the benefits of technology accessible at scale, taking these technologies global and strengthening India's position as a creator of technology for the world," Ambani said. The company had 533.3 million customers as of June 30, 2026. Jio is now among the largest data operators globally, carrying over 23 exabytes of data traffic every month.

Maruti's launch blitz fails to move market share

IT MEANS THAT despite the Victoris and eVitara pushing sales growth of 20.3% from 10,16,481 units to 12,23,179 units, it was marginally less than the overall passenger vehicle growth of 21% (from 25,05,557 units to 30,31,901 units).

A month-wise analysis shows that during four months of this calendar year (January-March, and June), Maruti Suzuki's market share dropped below 40%, with the share in March at a low of 37.6%. Automotive analysts told FE that new launches are largely substituting existing volumes rather than attracting net-new buyers. "While the Victoris generated 85,246 units in the first seven months of 2026, sales of the Grand Vitara dropped 13.6% from 62,423 units in January-July 2025 to 53,938 units during the same period this year," an analyst said.

"In addition, while sales of the volume products such as the Wagon R, Swift, Baleno, Alto, and Fronx are growing, these have not really attracted buyers from competitors. Overall, while cars like the Victoris are converting existing Maruti Suzuki hatchback and sub-4-metre SUV buyers into higher-priced SUVs, they haven't stopped rivals like Tata Motors, Mahindra, and Kia from capturing incremental market growth."

Maruti Suzuki's August sales highlights strong numbers, growing a robust 34.8% from 131,278 units to 176,971 units. But analysts said that evaluating Maruti Suzuki's launch blitz purely on seven-month dispatch numbers may present an incomplete picture. "The full force of the refreshed Brezza, Baleno, and the upcoming Fronx will truly materialise during the peak festive quarter, as plant ramps-up translate into peak delivery volumes," they said. "With dealer inventories aligned for the high-demand season, Maruti Suzuki is expected to claw back market share towards the end of this year."

Naysayers can't digest 7.8% GDP

"TERRORISTS WERE UNRESTRAINED and Pakistan was out of control. Today, those spreading terrorism are lincoured. If Pakistan indulges in any nefarious act, the Indian army enters their home and strikes; the back of Naxalism has been broken...from policy paralysis to policy dynamism, India has come a long way," he said.

The PM said the world once counted India amongst the 'Fragile Five'. "Today, they are talking about India as the fastest-growing major economy," he added. Modi said there were some who questioned his optimism and raised doubts about initiatives like 'Make in India'. He added that if Indians can lead the world's top companies, Indian companies can lead the world too; it is all possible. The PM also released a commemorative ₹100 coin to mark the centenary celebration.

Singapore govt won't interfere on Air India

"DECISIONS WILL BECOME politicised — shaped by political considerations, rather than commercial judgment. In the end, Singaporeans will bear the cost."

Air India is close to securing $1.1 billion in aid from its owners Tata Sons and Singapore Air, as the carrier grapples with the fallout from a turbulent year. The money is conditional on reaching certain performance milestones and will be paid out in installments, sources told Bloomberg.

The support would be proportional to shareholding, the people said, with Tata Sons owning 74.9% of Air India and Singapore Air the remainder.

"We should leave it to SIA to decide what it does with its investments," Shanmugam said.

"Of course, SIA shareholders, as well as the broader public, have a right to expect that SIA will be accountable and transparent. People have a right to expect that there will be a rigorous assessment before money is committed." The minister also said that Temasek Holdings, which is the majority owner of Singapore Air, does not account to the government for its individual investments or the investment decisions of its portfolio companies. Last month, Temasek said it takes a long-term perspective and is supportive of Singapore Air's business strategy on India.

"Temasek and its subsidiaries decide how to invest across a wide portfolio with investments of varied risks and varied time horizons," Shanmugam said. "Temasek is accountable to the government for its overall portfolio and its overall long-term performance."

TCS data centre in Telangana

TCS CEO AND managing director K Krithivasan framed the project as part of the company's infrastructure-to-intelligence strategy. "HyperVault advances TCS' strategy by bringing together AI-ready infrastructure with our cloud, engineering, enterprise transformation and AI capabilities. Hyderabad offers the scale, talent and ecosystem to serve global customers," Krithivasan said.

TCS had announced its intention to enter the AI infrastructure segment through an AI-ready data centre a few quarters back. Since then, it has secured a $1-billion investment from alternative asset management firm TPG.

Telangana Chief Minister A Revanth Reddy described the project as historic for both Telangana and India. "This establishes that Hyderabad is now at the forefront of the global AI revolution with a strong focus on infrastructure. This decade is one of artificial intelligence. Access to AI models and computing is fast becoming public infrastructure, and having this compute reside in Telangana gives us an advantage," said the chief minister.

"Our state formation day is June 2. Ground breaking to inauguration, there are 21 months from today. We want to inaugurate your AI data centre on June 2, 2028," he said. He also assured the company of giving all required sanctions.

IT and Industries Minister

D Sridhar Babu said the agreement reflected the state's approach to attracting technology investments. "We tell the investors and corporations across the world, Telangana means business."

HyperVault CEO and managing director Deepesh Kiran Nanda said the facility would focus on higher-density infrastructure, liquid cooling, larger power blocks and faster deployment for frontier AI companies and hyperscalers.

"We are building infrastructure for where AI is going. Hyderabad gives us the foundation to build that at scale for frontier AI companies and hyperscalers," he said.

The project will incorporate green energy and water-neutral design principles. It is also expected to catalyse the wider AI infrastructure ecosystem in India across power, cooling, networking, construction, engineering and operations, while generating several thousand direct and indirect jobs.

Fresh loan fraud case against Zee's Chandra

THE LOAN WAS secured by a personal guarantee from Chandra. In August 2018, the lender extended another ₹480 crore to Digital Subscriber Management and Consultancy Services and Spirit Infrapower and Multiventures under a rental discounting facility. This loan was also secured by Chandra's personal guarantee.

According to the complaint, the first loan was sanctioned partly on the basis of a net-worth certificate submitted by Chandra that put his net worth at $6.2 billion (₹59,113 crore) as of March 31, 2017. The second loan was sanctioned partly on the basis of another certificate stating his net worth at ₹40,562 crore. Both loan facilities subsequently went into default. The outstanding amount stood at ₹570.50 crore for the Vasant Sagar facility and ₹507.25 crore for the Digital loan, according to LIC Housing Finance's complaint. The complaint said Chandra reported his net worth in 2024 at ₹31.79 crore and stated that it had not exceeded ₹40,000 crore even in 2017-18.

The CBI has also named Vasant Sagar Properties, its director Pankaj Suruliyia, Pan India Infraprojects, Digital Subscriber Management and Consultancy Services, its director Amish Pandya, Spirit Infrapower and Multiventures, its director Rajeev Dholakia, and others.

AI big smartphone pitch, but basics remain pure

IT WAS THE aspect consumers most frequently said their current smartphone needs to improve, at 22%, ahead of camera at 17% and performance at 12%.

"While AI has moved from a talking point to an expectation, customers are just as clear about the fundamentals that still matter, like performance, battery and camera. They are also willing to pay more for the device that gets it right," said Zeba Khan, director, consumer electronics, Amazon India.

"Consumers still value the fundamentals of a fast, responsive and reliable device. With increasing tech literacy and rapid innovation, consumers are now looking for the right combination of features that best fits their usage needs," said Arushi Chawla, consumer research lead and senior analyst at Counterpoint.

The latest launches all add AI to the traditional smartphone formula of processor, camera, battery and display. Apple's iPhone 17 Pro and 17 Pro Max launched last year elevated Apple Intelligence, launched in 2024, with Image Background, Notify Me and Call Context features, adding to live translation, writing and summarisation tools and visual intelligence. This year's models, to be announced on September 9, are rumoured to have A20 Pro chip to optimise on-device Apple Intelligence, along with possibly the brand's first foldable smartphone.

Samsung's latest Galaxy Z Fold8 and higher-tier Galaxy Z Fold8 Ultra integrates Galaxy AI across devices. Google's Pixel 11 Pro, launched on August 12, offers deeper Gemini integration.

The AI push is also moving into phones outside the flagship segment. OnePlus' N6 offers AI editing tools such as AI Eraser and AI Reflection Eraser. OPPO's Reno16 5G brings AI into the hardware and a personal memory system integrating assistants including Gemini, Perplexity and ChatGPT. Vivo's S2 5G has AI Creation and Transcript Assist. Xiaomi's Redmi Note 15 series brings Google Gemini, Circle to Search and Xiaomi HyperAI.

Nothing's Phone (4b) uses Essential Space to parse screenshots and voice notes and turn them into tasks and reminders, alongside AI Eraser, voice transcription and ChatGPT-integrated widgets. Rather than being viewed as another standalone specification, AI is increasingly embedded across tools. "As a result, AI is evolving into a feature-level consideration that can influence consumer preference and, in some cases, trigger a purchase decision," Chawla added.

"I think smartphone differentiation is moving away from individual specifications and towards the overall user experience. Value for money will always matter, but it is becoming harder for brands built primarily around that proposition to stand out, particularly in a market where consumers are being remain important, consumers are increasingly looking at how intelligently a smartphone can adapt to the way they work, create, travel and go about their day," said an OPPO India spokesperson.

Samsung is taking the argument beyond the individual handset and towards the wider ecosystem. "AI is getting smarter faster, and this will continue. But to change how people live, it must answer: where, how and into whose hands does this intelligence reach? This will define AI's next chapter," Samsung Electronics CEO and President TM Roh wrote in a blog post.

OpenAI is reportedly preparing an AI-first, compact and screenless consumer device expected in 2027

That ecosystem is becoming increasingly relevant as smartphones face competition from devices that can perform functions once associated mainly with the phone.

Smartwatches handle health tracking, earbuds handle calls and voice interactions, laptops increasingly have AI assistants and smart glasses are being developed for navigation, translation and contextual information. Even OpenAI is reportedly preparing an AI-first consumer device, developed with former Apple design chief Jony Ive's LoveFrom studio and expected in 2027. The first device is expected to be compact and screenless, while OpenAI's longer-term ambition is reportedly to develop hardware that could eventually replace the smartphone.

For now, the smartphone remains the central device because of its portability, connectivity, app ecosystem and ability to integrate with other devices, according to Counterpoint's Chawla.

LIC gets nod to up stake in ICICI Bank to 9.99%

FE BUREAU
Chennai, September 5

THE RESERVE BANK of India (RBI) has approved Life Insurance Corporation of India (LIC) to acquire an aggregate holding of up to 9.99% of the paid-up share capital or voting rights in ICICI Bank, giving the state-owned insurer headroom to more than double its existing stake in the private lender.

The approval is valid for one year from the date of the RBI's approval letter, failing which it will stand cancelled, ICICI Bank said in a regulatory filing on Saturday. The approval is subject to compliance with applicable statutory and regulatory provisions. As of the June 2026 quarter, mutual funds held 29.60% of ICICI Bank, while insurance companies owned 8.24%. LIC's stake in the lender stood at 4.35%.

The RBI approval is an enabling provision and does not mean LIC will immediately raise its holding to 9.99%. Any increase in its stake will remain

ROOM FOR MORE

- Life insurer holds 4.35% stake in the private lender
- Last month, RBI allowed LIC to raise stake up to 9.99% in HDFC Bank
- LIC holds 8.83% stake in PNB, 8.47% in SBI, 7.87% in Axis Bank and 7.83% in BoI

■ Investors need RBI's prior approval to acquire 5% or more of the paid-up share capital or voting rights in a bank subject to applicable regulatory requirements and LIC's investment decisions. The approval comes weeks after LIC received RBI clearance to increase its stake in HDFC Bank to up to 9.99%.

As of August 14, LIC held 4.11% of HDFC Bank's total share capital. The latest approvals give LIC greater headroom to increase its ownership in India's largest private-sector banks, even as its holdings in several other lenders are already close to the regulatory ceiling.

Under RBI's shareholding norms, any person seeking to acquire 5% or more of the paid-up share capital or voting rights in a bank requires prior approval from the central bank. For non-promoters, the prescribed shareholding ceiling is generally 10%, with higher limits applicable to certain categories of investors.

According to Prime Database data, LIC held an 8.83% stake in PNB as of August 20, close to the regulatory limit. Its holdings in other major lenders included 8.47% in SBI, 7.87% in Axis Bank and 7.83% in Bank of India.

Meta restores Keralam CM's posts on FB

PRESS TRUST OF INDIA
Thiruvananthapuram, Sept 5

CHIEF MINISTER VD Satheesan on Saturday said Meta has restored two official posts that were removed from the CMO Keralam Facebook page following his office's intervention.

The posts related to the announcement of the Onam festival allowance for ASHA workers and greetings on the occasion of Nabi Day.

"Following strong intervention from the Keralam CMO, @Meta has restored the official posts arbitrarily removed from @CMOKeralam's Facebook page," the chief minister said in a post on X. "While the content is back online, the arbitrary takedown of verified government communications ranging from festival greetings to welfare notices remains a serious concern," Satheesan said.

The post said its Secretary Rattan U Kelkar, IAS, had taken up the matter with Meta and the Union Ministry of Electronics and Information Technology (MeitY).

TATA SONS SUCCESSION RACE

NSE's Chauhan emerges as dark horse

AMMAR ZAIDI
New Delhi, September 5

TATA SONS, THE holding company of the $275-billion-plus Tata conglomerate, has narrowed its search for a successor to Chairman N Chandrasekaran to three prominent corporate leaders — Tata Steel CEO and MD TV Narendran, Tata Sons Executive Director and Group CFO Saurabh Agrawal, and NSE MD and CEO Ashish Chauhan, people familiar with the matter said.

While Narendran has emerged as the frontrunner among internal candidates, Agrawal is also in the reckoning with his investment-banking and capital-allocation experience, while Chauhan, a veteran of India's capital markets and one of the founding executives of the National Stock Exchange (NSE), could turn out to be the dark horse, the people said.

The selection process is still underway, and no final decision has been taken. The Tata Sons board and the trusts that control the holding company are expected to play a key role in choosing the next chairman.

According to people familiar with the discussions,

Chauhan could be the surprise choice. Narendran brings Tata pedigree and is considered the natural internal contender for the top job, but his career has been almost entirely within Tata Steel, and he has relatively less experience at the holding-company level and in capital allocation.

Chauhan brings a markedly different profile. The NSE chief has deep experience in technology, capital markets, financial services and institution building. He was among the executives who helped establish the NSE in the 1990s and later served as MD and CEO of the BSE before returning to NSE as its chief in 2022.

An IIT Bombay graduate with a postgraduate management degree from IIM Calcutta, Chauhan has also worked at Reliance Industries and IDBI Bank. He is presently steering a ₹30,000-crore initial public offering (IPO) of NSE — the largest in Indian history so far that will value the stock exchange at about ₹5 lakh crore and place it among the 10 most valuable Indian companies by market capitalisation.

His candidature could offer the Tata Group an external-looking choice without bringing in a completely unknown face, people familiar with his profile said. Chauhan understands capital markets and the technology-driven transformation of large institutions, while his experience straddles corporate management, finance and technology.

He is also familiar with India's regulatory and policy environment, an attribute that could be useful as the group expands across highly regulated sectors, the people said. —PTI

Ola Electric board clears ₹1,500-crore fundraise

FE BUREAU
Chennai, September 5

OLA ELECTRIC SAID its board has approved a fundraising of up to ₹1,500 crore through the issuance of equity shares or other eligible securities, as the electric two-wheeler maker looks to shore up capital amid weak sales and a declining market share.

The proposed fundraising could be undertaken through multiple routes, including the issuance of equity shares and/or securities convertible into or exchangeable for equity shares. The fundraise will be subject to shareholders' and other regulatory approvals.

The latest fundraising effort comes just three months after Ola Electric raised ₹780 crore through a qualified institutional placement (QIP). Ola Electric reported a 29% year-on-year decline in sales to 13,849 units in August, even as rivals including TVS Motor, Bajaj Auto and Ather Energy continued to post growth.

The fundraise is also crucial as Ola Electric scales up its cell manufacturing capacity and expands into the battery energy storage business under its Ola Shakti and Mahashakti brands.

NTPC, Talcher Fertilizers bid for ₹37,500-cr coal gas project

ANI
New Delhi, September 5

TALCHER FERTILIZERS AND National Thermal Power Corporation (NTPC) have already submitted applications under the Centre's ₹37,500 crore coal and lignite gasification scheme, the Ministry of Coal said on Saturday, rejecting reports that the scheme has received no takers.

The Ministry said the first application window is still open and will close on September 7, making any assessment of the number of applications at this stage premature. It added that other prospective applicants are at various stages of preparing their projects and finalising applications.

The Scheme for Promotion of surface coal/lignite gasification projects was approved by the Cabinet in May, with an outlay of ₹37,500 crore. It aims to promote the conversion of domestic coal and lignite into higher-value products such as syngas, methanol, ammonia and urea.

The ministry said the scheme is expected to catalyse investments of around ₹2.5-₹3 lakh crore across 25 projects and generate 50,000 direct and indirect employment opportunities.

The Big Finance threat to Indian healthcare

A new book argues how PE players are more focused on profit than the patient

Who is really determining the price points at which you access healthcare services in this country, asks the author

SOMA DAS

HAVE THE GLOBAL PEs been just investing or quietly taking over decision-making in Indian hospitals and other healthcare sub-sectors? This topic has been the buzz in corridors and cafeterias at Indian hospitals for the past few years now, particularly in the post-pandemic phase. Now, former journalist and public-policy consultant Ameer Shahul pulls that cafeteria conversation out of industry corridors into the glare of public discourse by posing the same question in his book, The Silent Syndicate: How Big Finance is Destroying India's Healthcare. He asks the right questions: 'who prices your health?', implying who is really determining the price points at which you access healthcare services in this country?

"If the answer lies not in your doctor, not even in your country or Parliament but in your distant boardrooms of New York, Basel, Silicon Valley, then what we are witnessing is not just a policy drift, but a surrender," concludes the author.

Shahul starts with Kerala-headquartered KIMSHEALTH, and indicates — using patient experiences and staff interviews — how culture there has shifted from empathetic to cold, room rents have shot up, doctors feel pressured to meet increasing revenue targets and the mission of care has been compromised for margins after a PE-backed platform grabbed a majority share of the hospital chain through a complex web of deals.

In subsequent chapters, Shahul details how PEs have not only made inroads into, but worryingly captured control of many Indian hospital and diagnostic chains — both national as well as regional, besides med-tech companies. He also interrogates whether massive troves of sensitive health data — patient records, billing data, insurance histories, behavioural health details — that sits in hospital and diagnostic chain systems are really protected, or are they being shared with PE companies. "The risk is that Indian health data — gleaned from prescriptions, lab reports, fitness trackers, and hospital EMR (electronic medical records) — quietly flows into foreign controlled platforms, far beyond the jurisdiction of Indian law," he states, suggesting that the Digital Personal Data Act, under which health data is supposed to be regulated, is still in the process of being rolled out.

What is also being indicated is that the sudden interest of PEs across healthcare supply chains may have to do with this big data that comes with consolidation of hospital chains, diagnostic chains, e-pharmacies and digital healthcare firms that connect doctors, diagnostic players and pharmacies with patients. Imagine the kind of data an overseas entity such as a global PE player, which has a controlling stake across these healthcare entities, can mine in the name of improving efficiencies. These efficiencies should ideally reduce cost of care, but does that pass on to patients? Anecdotes suggest otherwise.

The author also covers how new cancer drugs under patent can be exorbitantly priced to exclude almost the whole population, making them inaccessible to most except the ultra rich. Whenever Indian players have challenged such pricing (such as Indian pharma firm Natco in case of cancer drug Nexavar through compulsory licensing, or Cipla by slashing the cost of HIV drugs), the companies in question and India as a trading partner have faced enormous backlash from Big Pharmas and US government agencies, not only in the pharmaceuticals space, but in other economic aspects too. Such are the rules of negotiations in global trading realms.

While dealing with the health insurance sector, the author argues that many multinational insurers who had partnered with domestic players in the early 2000s to enter an emerging market in post-liberalised India later lobbied with the BJP government to do away with FDI caps in the sensitive sector, only to exit at higher valuations, after the government gradually opened up the sector. He also claims that the entry of global reinsurers — companies that are insurers of insurance companies who take part of the risk by charging a premium in India — in 2016, has meant more rigid policies, pricier premiums, narrower coverage of diseases, more exclusions and a fine print that becomes difficult to navigate for patients and families in times of crisis. Health insurance complaints have surged 41% in the year ending March 2026 over the previous, according to regulatory data. This rise is largely driven by claim disputes, delays and partial settlements.

MOHIT HIRA

LIKE MANY PEOPLE of my vintage, I grew up wearing Bata shoes. And then outgrew them — again like many of my ilk. Somewhere between the Hawai chappal, Naughty Boy shoes and the launch of North Star, Marie Claire and Hush Puppies, Bata lost its footing. Some reports indicate that from a near 70% market share of India's post-independence footwear market, it now hangs on to just 4-5% of a highly fragmented category.

But this review — and the book in question — is not about Bata's market or brand. It's about Batanagar, a sprawling township built in 1934 to house the company's managers and workers on the outskirts of Calcutta (now Kolkata). On the banks of the placid Hooghly river, it was envisaged as the twin city of Zlín, the Czech garden city by industrialist Tomáš Bata. Bata's vision went far beyond factory floors: his endeavour was to create an integrated social architecture designed to house, educate, look after, and entertain workers within a self-contained ecosystem. However, India was no stranger to this concept: Tatanagar was already a thriving city, and other home-grown industrialist families including the Birlas and Kirlaskars had established these townships for their workforce.

But Batanagar: A Personal History of India's Forgotten Company Town, by Paramita Sen, who grew up in the township, tries to give a memoir an industrial-sociological veneer. It reminds me of a piece of graffiti I had come across decades ago: "Nostalgia is a thing of the past." And like the river that meanders past the place, the book wanders in and out of personal anecdotes, national history and socio-economic events. It is clearly a tribute to what was once a home; but is likely to have limited readership among Bata's alumni — more so, since Batanagar is a derelict township ruined by an apathetic West Bengal's declining economy and Brand Bata is fading into irrelevance for today's Indian youth.

The author sets a historical stage by detailing the daring of Czech architect Betislav Martinec and his team, who transformed snake-infested marshlands into a functional modern grid of brick homes, lush green boulevards, social clubs and sports complexes. The foundation stone read: "A monument to international understanding and collaboration." In early 20th-century India, Batanagar was hailed an example of progressive global welfare capitalism, earning the curiosity and admiration of figures ranging from Rabindranath Tagore to Jawaharlal Nehru. How a Czech company ingrained itself into the lifeblood of a young nation is admirable — for, most Indians believe Bata to be a desi company.

Growing up in Batanagar, Paramita Sen's narrative is replete with evocative recollections of growing up in the township during the 1970s and 1980s. The daughter of a long-time Bata executive, she paints a wistful yet observant picture of everyday colony life including its cosmopolitan community, rituals, festivals, and general camaraderie. None of this is, however, unique to the township for, as anyone who has grown up in a cloistered colony knows, these are commonplace.

To her credit, the author does acknowledge Batanagar's contradictions and faultlines. She documents early corporate hierarchies, segregation between senior management and factory hands, and the labour unrest of 1939 that redefined worker-management relations. Since it was set up just before India became independent, the country's turbulent history of the time impacted the cocooned township. The Bengal Famine of 1943 and Partition put immense pressure on Bata's internal welfare and ration networks during devastating food shortages. A couple of decades later, the Naxalbari movement and labour militancy brought class warfare directly to the factory gates, leading to frequent lockouts and strikes as West Bengal's industrial ecosystem gradually frayed. The state is yet to recover from these malaises, but Batanagar was fatally hit. By the mid-1980s, unable to grapple with West Bengal's labour politics and a Communist government, Bata moved key production units elsewhere. This triggered a corporate exodus from West Bengal that relocated Sen's own family in 1985 to Bangalore. However, if a reader believes the book will provide deeper insights into the company's performance or labour economics of that era, there will be acute disappointment.

In contemporary India, where work is increasingly fragmented and hybrid, cities are costly and the sense of career loyalty is waning, Paramita Sen's recollection of a township built around an enduring community is fairly indulgent. Though she stops short of urging that company towns should be revived, the book does prompt a nagging question: what have we lost when employers, governments and city planners dissociate work from society at large? To that extent, the book is a stimulant.

But read it only if you have some linkage to Bata as an employer, or are in the mood for a walk down memory lane.

VAISHALI DAR

JUST HAVE A simple conversation with Vankar Shamji Valji, and you will know how deeply traditional craft can respond to the climate crisis, not as nostalgia, but as a living, adaptive, climate-positive system.

A third-generation weaver from the Vankar community living in the arid village of Bhujodi in Kutch, Gujarat, Shamji, as he is fondly called in his community and by professionals, has reinterpreted the traditional woollen Dhabhla — a thick pastoral blanket — into contemporary stoles and home linens. This is not mere product diversification; it is an ecological argument. Instead of feeding fast-fashion cycles that thrive on planned degeneration, he extends the life and relevance of heritage designs. His collaborations, including with Alamwar Textiles, the Hyderabad-based sustainable fashion and home textile label, focus on upcycling vintage fabrics, reducing textile waste while preserving craftsmanship.

“Weaving in Kutch follows the rhythm of nature. Families farm during the monsoon and weave in the dry months, using hand-spun wool from local sheep. This circular system minimises transport, energy use, and synthetic inputs,” Shamji tells FE during his recent visit to New Delhi.

In this act of Shamji lies a blueprint for climate resilience, seasonality, locality, material intelligence, and human-scale production. Recognised with the National Award for Weaving and the UNESCO Seal of Excellence, Shamji demonstrates that craft is regenerative, while Bhujodi becomes a model of how handicraft sustains livelihoods, strengthens shared value systems, and imagines a low-carbon future led by the human hand.

Clearly, the modern fashion industry is notorious for waste and pollution. Synthetic fibres shed microplastics, dye houses discharge untreated effluents, and over-production fills landfills at staggering rates. According to the Fashion Transparency Index, which reviews and ranks 250 of the biggest global fashion and apparel brands and retailers, only 34% of brands publish their carbon footprint at the processing level and a mere 22% at the raw material level — revealing how opaque and extractive the global system remains. In fact, India generates over 7.7 million tonne of textile waste annually, accounting for roughly 8.5% of the global total, with around 42% coming from pre-consumer sources and over 50% from post-consumer waste.

However, crafts and handlooms serve as a sustainable, low-carbon alternative to powerlooms, actively combating the country’s massive textile waste (up to 45,000 metres daily in hubs) by upcycling waste into new, high-fashion products. Utilising natural fibres, these promote circularity, with techniques like patching, weaving, and traditional patchwork converting factory cutting waste into durable products.

Shamji has championed the revival of natural dyes — working with lac, madder, pomegranate peels, turmeric and harda (haritaki) instead of fibre-weakening acid dyes. These plant-based processes reduce chemical discharge and keep dyeing small-scale and community-centred. The result is not only environmentally responsible but materially superior: textiles that age gracefully, retaining integrity rather than degrading into waste.

Since handloom weaving is low-energy by design, it relies on human skill rather than fossil fuel-powered machinery. Also, natural dyeing reduces chemical discharge, and localised production shortens supply chains. Even so, the traditional systems embed circularity not as a marketing slogan but as an operational reality.

Historical reality

Long before sustainability became a corporate imperative, traditional craft ecosystems were inherently climate-aligned. They utilised biodegradable materials — bamboo, cotton, wool, natural fibres — and techniques like Kantha embroidery, which upcycles old textiles, and Kalamkari, which employs vegetable dyes.

As Hema Singh Rance, director, Arts India, at the British Council, observes, “Traditional craft practices have long embedded principles that the fashion industry is now striving to adopt — biodegradability, circularity and low-carbon production. Techniques such as Kantha embroidery, which upcycles existing textiles, and Kalamkari, which uses vegetable dyes or bamboo and natural fibre-based weaving systems, demonstrate how zero-waste thinking has historically been integral to craft ecosystems.”

Institutions like the British Council have actively supported initiatives such as New Landscapes India, Crafting Futures, and Making Futures to bring together artisans, designers, technologists, and researchers from India and the UK to explore sustainable futures for fashion and textiles.

Yet Rance cautions that collaboration is not automatically equitable, adding, “Crafts offer a credible pathway towards a climate-positive fashion industry by shifting away from mass production to slow, intentional and place-based making. However, collaboration between artisan communities, technologists and sustainability experts is often hindered by imbalanced partnerships, limited access to digital tools, and innovation approaches that do not fairly benefit artisan communities. Ethical collaboration starts by recognising artisans

Craft, community & CLIMATE

While craft & artisan communities face disruptions from climate crisis, their low-carbon, sustainable practices also offer vital models for climate action

(Above, above right & inset) SaiChi, a Delhi-based label, makes its saree fabrics from natural, plant-based yarns; (top & top inset) institutions like the British Council actively support initiatives to explore sustainable futures for fashion and textiles

as partners and co-creators.”

Several experimental collaborations demonstrate how craft knowledge can meet technological innovation responsibly. British Council projects under New Landscapes India, such as partnerships between Botto Labs in India and The Stitch Archive in the UK, are developing bio-based sequins. Alongside Vashishtha Luxury India, embroidery materials are being created from agricultural waste, offering low-impact alternatives for the luxury sector. Meanwhile, collaborations between Post Carbon Lab (UK) and True Tone Ink India explore microbial dyes as regenerative, water-efficient alternatives to synthetic colour systems.

Equally significant is work around indigenous materials such as Desi Oon (native wool), where collaborations with pastoralist communities and academic partners improve traceability and strengthen livelihoods. The Circular Hand-spun project — between Conserve India, Khadi London, Khamir Crafts and Where Does it Come From? — demonstrates how waste fabrics can be recycled back into usable yarns and reintegrated into the textile value chain. “Complementing these efforts, tools such as the Digital Craft Toolkit help artisans engage with digital technologies, supporting skills development, documentation, and greater transparency across craft and fashion supply chains,” adds Rance.

Artisans as co-innovators

For Ashish Dhaka, academician and director of Fashion Revolution India, an organisation advocating fashion activism, mobilising citizens, brands and policymakers through research, education and advocacy, the shift must be philosophical as much as technical. “Yes, artisans must be positioned not just as makers, but as co-innovators in climate solutions within the fashion industry — by recognising them as authors of knowledge rather than executors of design.”

He describes artisans’ intergenerational expertise in materials, fibre cycles, biodiversity, seasonality, and low-energy processes as a form of ecological intelligence. “This shift requires moving away from hierarchical design interventions toward co-design and research-led collaborations where artisans lead innovation from within craft logic,” adds Dhaka.

Artisan-driven organisations based in Kutch, Gujarat, such as Kala Raksha, Shrujan and Khamir, focus on preserving, developing and promoting traditional Kutchi handicrafts. These brands have demonstrated how equitable frameworks, ensuring shared authorship, intellectual property rights, and fair contracts, can reinforce this repositioning.

Take, for instance, Kala Raksha, which is dedicated to preserving, documenting, and promoting traditional Kutchi embroidery and applique arts, while Shrujan strengthens the livelihoods of female artisans by nurturing their embroidery skills and providing direct market access.

Historically, craft emerged within local economies of exchange rather than profit-driven global markets. Farmers, spinners, weavers and printers worked interdependently. “A farmer would provide cotton to the weaver, the weaver to the printer, and each participant retained a share of value. Craft, in its original form, was never designed for profit maximisation or mass consumption,” Dhaka explains.

Conscious luxury

Handcrafted designer brands are witnessing a meaningful shift in both consumer preferences and brand philosophy.

ies. One such example is SaiChi, a Delhi-based label working closely with artisanal processes and material innovation. Maneesha Sharma, co-founder of SaiChi, says, “Today’s women seek pieces that bring together newness, comfort, and appeal, while remaining deeply sensitive and mindful in their material and design preferences.”

She notes a growing appreciation for the story behind a product, the people who made it, the processes involved, and the environmental impact of materials used. “We consciously communicate that our saree fabrics are not plastic-based, whether recycled or otherwise, but made from natural, plant-based yarns selected with environmental mindfulness.”

SaiChi’s philosophy is rooted in longevity. “We believe that while people may afford luxury, the planet may not always afford the choices behind it. Sustainability begins with creating something meant to last. At a time when market trends lean toward sequins, beads, and glitter — materials with significant environmental compromise — we focus on practices such as threadwork, hand painting, and refined, minimal embellishments. For example, traditional tissue fabrics were often stiff, whereas today’s wearer seeks softer, body-hugging drapes. This has led us to explore new material treatments and revive techniques such as fabric beating to achieve unexpected softness, a reminder that craft evolves through continuous research and experimentation.”

Technology as enabler

Technology, when thoughtfully used, becomes an enabler for crafts. Mobile-enabled communication clarifies orders and timelines for artisans, dedicated looms ensure material authenticity, labels are made from surplus fabric with handwritten details, wet waste is composted, and even small operations can embody circular principles.

But Dhaka emphasises that technology must strengthen existing craft systems rather than industrialise them. “Tools such as demand forecasting and virtual sampling can reduce overproduction and material waste. Blockchain and digital documentation can authenticate provenance, trace supply chains, and record social and cultural value,” says Dhaka.

With global emphasis on transparency, digital product passports, and regulatory compliance, the craft sector must upgrade. Like the EU’s Digital Product Passport, part of the Ecodesign for Sustainable Products Regulation (ESPR) approved in 2024, mandates a digital identifier for textiles and other goods to improve circularity and transparency. Accessible via QR code or NFC, it will track a product’s lifecycle from raw materials to disposal, expected to fully phase in around 2028.

Technology can preserve endangered traditions through systematic documentation — archiving techniques, narratives, and cultural contexts beyond legal instruments such as GI tags. When applied contextually, technology safeguards knowledge while making craft-led sustainability visible and accountable.

Overcoming barriers

Climate change directly affects traditional livelihoods. Extreme heat disrupts work rhythms. Material shortages increase costs. Simultaneously, power looms and synthetic blends flood markets with cheaper alternatives.

Krishna Basak, the 36-year-old weaver from West Bengal working with SaiChi, speaks of watching power looms replace handlooms in his village. “I am constantly being told to buy cheaper blended yarn. I choose not to, because I know it has environmental, health and safety issues. When we mix the cheera (flat rice) and make the saree shine with the glaze of the natural starch from it, we are not able to tell the customer why we should be given price for the effort that goes into these processes,” says

(Above) The Porgai Artisans’ Association in Tamil Nadu is reviving the traditional Lambadi embroidery, offering sustainable livelihoods to local women facing migration due to climate-induced farming failures

Basak, adding, “But I try to support more weavers by getting them work so that the remaining handloom households can survive because workers are also migrating to other regions where they find work.”

The pressure is relentless. Market demand prioritises sheen and price over process and integrity.

“There are times I’m told about price differences and about the availability of less expensive sarees with perfect sheen and feel. But I propagate clarity on materials used like azo-free dyeing, pure yarn and attempting authentic product commitment to customers as well as workforce are important to us,” adds Sharma, whose labels are made with surplus fabric and handwritten details, stitched with thread and makes compost from wet waste.

Likewise, the Porgai Artisans’ Association, co-founded by Dr Lalitha Regi, who runs the Tribal Health Initiative in Sittilingi Valley, Dharmapuri, Tamil Nadu, is reviving the traditional Lambadi embroidery, offering sustainable livelihoods to local women facing migration due to climate-induced farming failures, and empowering over 70 artisans with economic independence, promoting ethical, slow fashion as a climate-resilient alternative to poverty-driven migration.

In Assam, the government has taken a strong stance to protect handloom weavers after the traditional gamosa and mekhela sador received Geographical Indication status in 2022. Machine-made imports, often cheaper, threatened the livelihood of artisans. Policy intervention became necessary to preserve cultural identity and economic survival. Such measures highlight a larger truth: climate-positive craft cannot thrive without structural support.

Ethical collaboration demands participatory design, capacity building, and long-term investment. It requires moving beyond extractive engagement models toward shared authorship. When artisans are recognised not merely as custodians of heritage but as critical contributors to climate solutions, the narrative shifts from preservation to leadership.

Climate strategy

Sustainability has been the buzzword for the craft industry. Among a few initiatives, the Ministry of Textiles last year launched the book titled Carbon Footprint Assessment in the Indian Handloom Sector: Methods and Case Studies, jointly prepared by the Office of Development Commissioner for Handlooms, Ministry of Textiles and Department of Textiles & Fibre Engineering, IIT, Delhi. It strengthens the government’s commitment to environmentally conscious handloom production and sustainable development by providing clear, practical methodologies to measure and reduce the carbon footprint of the handloom industry — a vital socio-economic sector and a symbol of India’s rich cultural heritage. The book comprises simple steps to measure carbon footprint through real-world case studies across India, including products such as cotton bedsheets, floor mats, Ikat sarees, Banarasi sarees, and other iconic handloom items. It also includes methodologies for low-cost data collection and emission measurement methods designed specifically for the handloom sector to enhance eco-friendly production.

Similarly, the Sustainable Fashion Dictionary, launched in partnership with Lakme Fashion Week and FDCI, is a key resource for understanding eco-friendly fashion, circular design, and conscious consumption. Printed on recycled paper, it serves as a jargon-free guide for industry professionals and consumers, highlighting terms like ‘rewilding fashion’, which focuses on ecosystem healing, and goes beyond just reducing harm to actively helping the planet heal through natural fibres, organic dyes, and carbon-sequestering farming methods.

While the climate crisis demands radical imagination, traditional craft may be one of the most radical responses available.

Rhymes to REELS

India’s poetry ecosystem has quietly migrated onto social media, where recitations and spoken-word clips are creating a new generation of literary audiences

SUGANDHA MUKHERJEE

FOR DECADES, POETRY in India lived in carefully defined spaces. There were slim literary magazines, crowded kavi sammelans, Urdu mushairas stretching into the night, campus open mics and dog-eared books passed between friends. Discovery and audiences were limited while recognition often stayed within literary circles.

Now, poetry arrives in 60-second bursts between skincare tutorials and food videos. India’s poetry ecosystem has quietly migrated onto social media, where reels, recitations and spoken-word clips are creating a new generation of literary audiences. This has created space for a remarkably diverse ecosystem. Hindi and Urdu spoken-word creators such as Nayab Midha (2.9 million followers) and Aman-deep Singh (809,000 followers) have built large online followings through emotionally resonant performances. Bengali creator Maharshi Nandi (426,000 followers) recites highly relatable poetry about everyday life, while Ajibar Mandal (45,200 followers), a farmer from Nadia in West Bengal, became an internet sensation through deep-voiced recitations of Bengali verse.

The shift is part of a much larger transformation in Indian media habits. Social media is now India’s dominant destination for content across age groups and interests, with short-form video sitting at the centre of consumption patterns. The latest IPSOS study commissioned by Meta found that 97% of Indian consumers watch short-form videos at least once a day, while 92% identified Reels as their preferred platform. Reels is now reportedly the country’s most watched short-form video format, performing strongly particularly among Gen Z audiences and affluent urban consumers.

For Meta, the platform’s significance lies beyond scale. “India is leading the world in video adoption, and Reels is at the centre of this shift,” said Arun Srinivas, managing director and head of Meta India, in a statement accompanying the report. The company says Reels now drives major cultural conversations online, from fashion and beauty trends to music and memes. Poetry, unexpectedly, has become part of that ecosystem.

Audience & algorithms

Khushi Thakur did not set out to become a literary influencer. The 23-year-old MBA student from Bulandshahr in Uttar Pradesh grew up reading Hindi novels, poems and short stories outside her school curriculum. “I was not interested in studying in school so much but enjoyed reading these books and poems,” she says. Much of her reading material came through internet searches.

Five or six years ago, she began sharing her own poems on a personal Instagram account, but little came of it. She taught herself video-making through YouTube tutorials and gradually immersed herself in Hindi literature. Then, sometime last year, she recorded herself reciting Vinod Kumar Shukla’s Hatasha while sitting on her terrace. “I just balanced my phone on a brick and started recording,” she says. The video went viral with over 5,000 reposts.

Today, her Instagram page, @evermoreavalon, has over 277,000 followers. The account primarily features her reciting poems written by other Hindi poets, from canonical writers such as Mahadevi Varma to Kedarnath Singh. Her selection process is instinctive. “When I read a poem and I feel yeh kavita sumi jaani chahiye, something different than the usual but still very much grounded and based on reality without any false hopes,” she says.

The popularity of such content has challenged assumptions about the attention span and cultural preferences of younger audiences online. “People say Gen Zs are like this or like that, but they are open-minded,” she says. She recalls that Kumar Ambuj’s poem Khana Banati Streeya, centred on women’s labour, resonated strongly, particularly among young male audiences.

For Thakur, the problem is not lack of interest in literature, but discoverability. “I think there is an audience, but the right thing is not reaching them somehow.”

The recommendation algorithms of social media platforms have turned poetry into trend-driven content in ways both exciting and unsettling. Certain books and writers periodically dominate feeds. “For example, Dharamvir Bharati’s Gunahon Ka Devta, everyone is reading and it is a trending content,” she says. “But there are also people who would read other stuff as well.”

That tension between virality and literary depth sits at the heart of Instagram poetry culture. Short-form platforms reward immediacy, emotional clarity and visual appeal. But poetry often demands slowness. “Not every poetry can give you that dopamine kick,” says Thakur. “You need to give some poems some time.”

Her own literary explorations increasingly move away from viral titles toward forgotten writers and obscure books discovered in libraries. She recalls reading Anayas, a 1998 book by a writer named Ananya. “I could not find anything about the author. There is nothing written about the writer, I’ve searched everywhere but couldn’t. I just feel grateful that I found this one.”

The emotional intimacy of poetry

(Left to right) Bengaluru-based spoken-word poet Daniel Sukumar (@mannequin_the_poet) has been writing and performing poetry since 2014; Delhi-based creator Deepshikha (@deepsheikhhaa) recites her own poems and those of others; Bulandshahr-based Khushi Thakur (@evermoreavalon) has over 277,000 followers on Instagram content online has also created unusually personal creator-audience relationships. Followers regularly message her about how particular poems affected them. One message remains especially haunting. “A person texted me saying a woman follower passed away and she used to like my reels, so now the person is following me,” she says quietly. “To me, it felt like a personal loss.”

Verse & visibility

If Thakur represents literary curation, Delhi-based creator Deepshikha represents the creator economy emerging around poetry itself.

The 23-year-old, originally from Gaya in Bihar, works on the social media team at Rajkamal Prakashan while simultaneously building her own Instagram presence, @deepsheikhhaa, where she recites both her own poems and those of others.

Her entry into poetry content creation was similarly organic. “I have been interested in poetry and literature since I was in school,” she says. “Whenever I used to read poetry and if I really liked that, I remember it myself,” she adds.

One of her first successful videos featured Ahmed Faraz’s Ab uski yaad raat din nahi, magar kabhi kabhi. “I heard it two-three times on YouTube because I really liked that. And I remembered it completely,” she says, adding: “So, I recorded and then I got a very good response on that.”

Unlike older literary traditions that often prized linguistic complexity, Instagram poetry rewards accessibility. “For me, a good poem is that type of poem which anyone can read and understand,” she says. “I don’t really like poems with very heavy words because then it does not reach the masses.”

Much of the success of digital poetry lies in emotional relatability. Breakups, loneliness, nostalgia and homesickness dominate engagement metrics because they mirror the emotional lives of users scrolling late into the night. “There are a lot of things which we can’t communicate. We try to find it in art,” Deepshikha says. “Mostly poetry or ghazal, it says what we want to say but we can’t say it clearly.”

At the same time, poetry has become increasingly shaped by platform aesthetics. Visual style, fonts, background music and editing now matter almost as much as literary quality. “Reels play a very, very big role in popularising poetry,” she says. “That attracts people as well, no? Like the font that you use or the music that you add.”

Publishers are paying attention. Influencers who recite poetry are increasingly used to market books, while poetry-themed content helps drive visibility for authors and publishers online. Yet monetisation remains weak, particularly for Hindi creators. “Hindi publishers don’t want to pay influencers money. But some English publishers do,” she says.

Feeds & fears

For Bengaluru-based spoken-word poet Daniel Sukumar, Instagram’s rise has transformed poetry in more complicated ways. Sukumar (@mannequin_the_poet), who has been writing and performing poetry since 2014, approaches the medium less as emotional catharsis and more as political documentation. His work focuses heavily on caste, class and social inequality.

“I am not a poet who writes for inspiration,” he says. “I write because I am frustrated about something.”

His poetry frequently transforms political anger into intimate personal imagery. One poem about the thickness of sambar in a south Indian household was inspired by a politician’s dismissive comments about onion prices. Another explores caste through the symbolism of onion-less sambar prepared in certain communities.

For Sukumar, poetry becomes a way of processing helplessness. “You experience the world around you and you see all the horrible things that the world is doing and you just let that sit in,” he says.

Unlike creators optimised for reels, Sukumar remains deeply sceptical of social media’s influence on poetry itself. “All of these social media platforms are open towards videos, shorter videos,” he says. “Even poets right now are in a fight to fit their poetry into Instagram.”

He believes the algorithm increasingly privileges appearance and performance over text itself. “The internet wants a head with a face on it to talk,” he says. That creates new anxieties for poets uncomfortable with personal branding culture. “I want to be a poet. I don’t want to be a model.”

His critique reflects a broader tension in the creator economy. While platforms have democratised access to audiences, they have also standardised performance styles and aesthetic expectations.

Political poetry faces additional constraints. Sukumar argues that many creators avoid subjects such as caste because of fears around backlash, audience alienation or platform hostility. “A lot of self-censoring has happened,” he says. “They would talk about mental health, they would talk about other topics but they wouldn’t talk about caste because it’s very political for them.”

Yet he also sees poetry as uniquely capable of disrupting social bubbles. Spoken-word performances about caste practices or honour killings expose audiences to realities they may otherwise never encounter.

His work often draws from deeply disturbing incidents. Recently, he has been unable to stop thinking about the murder of a 19-year-old boy in Tamil Nadu who was allegedly killed for being in a relationship across caste lines. “For me, this has been stuck in my head for the longest time,” he says. “Someday it will come out as a poem.”

STORIES AND TRENDS FROM INDIA AND AROUND THE WORLD THAT CAUGHT OUR FANCY

Fashion designer John Galliano (left), American rapper Kanye West (right), British grime artiste Wiley (below) have faced backlash for making antisemitic remarks

Being politically CORRECT

When the past catches up with creative figures over controversial remarks

VAISHALI DAR

FOR YEARS, THE cultural world has faced a difficult question: Can great art be separated from the person who created it? The cancellation of the Metropolitan Museum of Art's planned exhibition on fashion designer John Galliano shows that the answer is becoming even more complicated when antisemitism is involved.

The Met and Galliano recently cancelled John Galliano: Horizons, a major retrospective that was due to take place in spring 2027. The decision followed criticism of Galliano's antisemitic and racist remarks. In 2011, Galliano was convicted in France over the remarks and was fired by Dior. He later rebuilt his career at Maison Margiela, where his creative talent helped restore his reputation in the fashion industry.

But an exhibition at the Met would have meant more than another career comeback. The museum is one of the world's most powerful cultural institutions. Giving Galliano a major retrospective could have been seen as moving his story from rehabilitation to full recognition.

The backlash came from Jewish leaders, politicians and others. The timing also attracted criticism because the exhibition was planned around Yom HaShoah, Holocaust Remembrance Day.

Galliano eventually withdrew from the exhibition, saying he did not want it to cause hurt or distract from the museum's work. He acknowledged the pain caused by his past remarks, particularly to Jewish and Asian communities, and said that true atonement could not come from a single public gesture. In a statement, Galliano said, "I remain fully accountable for the pain caused by my words in the past, particularly the hurt I caused to the Jewish and Asian communities, and I remain deeply sorry for it. I understand that meaningful atonement is not achieved through an exhibition, institutional recognition or a single public gesture. It is a continuing responsibility, demonstrated through listening, learning and one's conduct over time."

Galliano is not the only major creative figure whose antisemitic behaviour has raised questions about rehabilitation. American rapper and songwriter Kanye West, legally known as Ye, is one of the most prominent examples. In 2022, Ye made a series of antisemitic statements on social media and in interviews. He promoted conspiracy theories about Jewish people and later praised Adolf Hitler and the Nazis.

The response from major companies was swift. Adidas ended its highly profitable Yeezy partnership with him. Gap and Balenciaga also cut ties, while Vogue and other major fashion players distanced themselves from the artiste.

The fallout showed that antisemitism can become a serious business risk. This year, the United Kingdom blocked the rapper from entering the country, citing his anti-semitic comments. Not just the UK but two sold-out stadium concerts scheduled for St Petersburg were cancelled, while his successful performance in Istanbul in May, drew 120,000 fans. However, the event sparked political controversy when Turkish presidential advisers condemned his lyrics as offensive to the nation's cultural values.

Hollywood has faced similar controversies. In 2006, actor and director Mel Gibson was arrested for driving under the influence in Malibu. During the arrest, he made antisemitic comments, including blaming Jews for wars around the world. The remarks caused international outrage and severely damaged his career. Hollywood studios, agencies and executives largely distanced themselves from him for years.

Unlike today, Gibson's remarks came before social media became a dominant force. Yet the incident still showed how quickly antisemitic comments by a celebrity can overshadow years of professional success.

The music industry has faced its own reckoning. In 2020, British grime artiste Wiley, whose real name is Richard Kylea Cowie Jr, posted a series of antisemitic messages on Twitter and Instagram. His management dropped him, while music platforms and retailers removed his work from prominent playlists. The incident also led to a celebrity boycott of X (then Twitter) under the hashtag #NoSpaceForJewHatred, protesting the platform's handling of the posts.

Meanwhile, critics argue that controversial artistes should be studied and their work judged on its artistic value. Museums can provide context and acknowledge an artiste's wrongdoing rather than simply hiding it.

For years, institutions argued that recognising artistic achievement did not mean endorsing every action of an artiste. But when the controversy involves antisemitism, that distinction is becoming harder to defend. The cultural world is now being asked to consider not just whether an artiste deserves a second chance, but what kind of recognition that second chance should bring.

TECH-NOW-LOGY

Playing it smart

From chessboard to sports field, the next generation of wearable devices is measuring not only the score, but also the mind and body behind it

SREYA DEB

TECHNOLOGY IS INCREASINGLY being used to not only see what players score but also analyse the way they think, train and compete. A recent partnership between CircleChess, one of India's top chess training institutes, and NeuroStellar, makers of Orbit, a smart headband that turns 10-15 minute sessions into instant cognitive reports, offers a striking example - the chessboard becomes not only a measure of tactical skill, but also a setting in which cognitive performance can be studied.

The collaboration, presented through NeuroStellar and CircleChess's 'Battle of Brains' initiative, combines competitive chess with wearable neurotechnology. Orbit is designed to capture brain-related signals and translate them into data that can potentially offer insights into focus, cognitive endurance and performance. The concept reflects a wider shift in gaming technology - instead of simply recording who won, devices can increasingly examine how people perform while they play.

For board games, AI has already become a powerful aid, with smart chess boards able to recognise moves, provide analysis, connect players remotely and offer computer opponents that adjust to different levels of ability. AI coaching systems can also identify recurring mistakes and suggest areas for improvement, providing a play session akin to a personalised training session.

With the integration of Orbit into chess, other board games could also potentially combine data on moves, playing patterns and player behaviour to understand when concentration is declining or when a player is taking unusual risks. Such systems could help players review not just what happened on the board, but why their decision-making changed during a match.

Sports are developing along a similar path, with wearable sensors collecting information about movement, heart rate, workload and recovery. AI can process these large datasets far more quickly than a human coach, helping identify patterns associated with fatigue, training load or performance. Research into AI-powered wearables has increasingly focused on providing actionable information rather than simply collecting statistics.

Leading examples in the area include the Whoop 4.0, which allows athletes wearing this strap to continuously track heart rate variability, sleep quality, and respiratory rates, feeding data into an AI algorithm that calculates daily recovery and strain scores. Similarly, the Catapult One Vests, used by professional footballers and soccer players, are GPS-enabled smart vests to measure total distance, sprint speed, and player load, allowing AI platforms to optimise training and prevent injuries, among others.

The appeal is emerging strongly in high-performance sports. For example, a runner, footballer or tennis player may be able to use this data to understand how physical strain affects concentration, agility, and stamina. Coaches, meanwhile, can use aggregated information to tailor training rather than relying only on observation or individually collected performance statistics.

AI COACHING SYSTEMS CAN IDENTIFY RECURRING MISTAKES AND SUGGEST AREAS FOR IMPROVEMENT

At the same time, it has been argued that more data does not automatically mean better performance. Players may become overwhelmed by metrics, while athletes and coaches must consider accuracy, privacy and how sensitive physiological or cognitive information is stored and used. Recent discussion around AI wearables has also highlighted the difficulty of turning huge quantities of personal data into genuinely useful advice. For board game players, the challenge will be preserving the human element. The future of technology in play may not be about putting AI between humans and their games, but about creating tools that reveal more about how humans think, train and perform. From a chessboard to a sports field, the emerging message is clear: the next generation of smart play could measure not only the score, but the mind and body behind it.

Heart disease scanner

Doctors have developed an AI tool that can identify signs of heart failure and heart valve disease from routine ECG results in less than two seconds. The system has been trained on data from millions of patients and extracts information from ECGs that may not be visible to the human eye. Details of the breakthrough, which could boost early diagnosis of heart disease, were presented to thousands of delegates at the European Society of Cardiology annual congress in Munich, the world's largest heart conference.

Farmers' assistant

Deere & Co has introduced an AI assistant called JD in its Operations Center mobile application. The chatbot uses data collected from high-tech tractors during planting, crop treatment and harvesting to help farmers make decisions, such as whether fields need more or less fertiliser. Powered partly by a LLM, JD can analyse field data during the growing season rather than after harvest.

Author as a 'person'

The Indian Copyright Office has ruled that an AI system cannot be named the author of a work it creates, while the work itself may be eligible for copyright protection. The finding came in a case involving US AI researcher and Imagination Engines CEO Stephen Thaler, who sought copyright registration for an artwork, A Recent Entrance to Paradise, generated by his AI system DABUS. The office cited the Copyright Act's definition of an author as a "person".

Shirt that can 'hide' you

Berlin artist Simon Weckert has created 'Digital Camouflage', a 65 euros recycled-polyester shirt featuring high-contrast pink, orange and green patterns designed to disrupt computer-vision systems. The geometric shapes and high-contrast colour blobs break up the statistical visual markers (like edges, contours, and proportions) that algorithms rely on. Weckert tested the patterns against YOLO, an open-source object-detection system, until its confidence in detecting a human body dropped sharply. The project was developed in response to pilot AI video-surveillance deployments in public spaces, including Berlin's Kottbusser Tor.

Blockbuster robot

Microdroid, a programmable personal robot from Pollen Robotics, the French subsidiary of Hugging Face, uses Rockchip's RK3566 chip, which incorporates technology licensed from ARM. The robot has sold more than 10,000 units since its launch, generating more than $4 million at a $399 unit price, and new orders are now facing delivery delays beyond the original Christmas 2026 estimate. Rockchip chips are used in on-device AI and machine-vision applications including object detection and image recognition.

Musicians hijacked by spam

The Spotify, Amazon Music and YouTube profiles of several deceased jazz musicians have been flooded with newly uploaded AI-generated music. Artists, including William 'Sonny' Criss, Jean Carne, Red Nichols and Jimmie Noone have had new tracks and anime-style cover art posted to their profiles, attributed to a publisher named 'Ami bacuk'. The jazz-inspired songs do not appear to be remixes of identifiable recordings by the musicians.

Analysing e-books

Google introduced Expert Intelligence, linking Google Play Books with Gemini Notebook, formerly NotebookLM. It lets users add eligible purchased ebooks to a notebook to ask questions, cross-reference personal data, and generate audio overviews, quizzes, infographics, with Gemini providing citations from the book. The feature can turn chapters into study guides and combine book content with users' notes, PDFs or spreadsheets.

'Talking' statues

New York's Metropolitan Museum of Art has introduced an AI experience that lets visitors interact with four medieval sculptures through voice or text. QR codes allow visitors to 'talk' to statues of Mary Magdalene, Saint Augustine, Saint Savina of Troyes and Balthazar. The underlying Town Square AI model was developed with Ask Mona and trained using input from curators, conservators and provenance experts from the Met's Medieval Art department.

Well Being

SREYA DEB

CANNABIS-DERIVED PRODUCTS are quietly shaping a new segment of the wellness market. These items, created using chemical compounds extracted from the cannabis plant, primarily tetrahydrocannabinol (THC) and cannabidiol (CBD), are increasingly finding their way into gummies, oils, gels, supplements and even prescription medicines. But are they really healthy, or just recreational drugs packaged as a wellness fad?

Availability concerns

The biggest concern is not cannabis itself, but the speed at which products derived from the plant are being normalised without adequate regulation or public understanding of risks, says Dr S Chatterjee, senior consultant, internal medicine, Indraprastha Apollo Hospital.

Many supplements marketed as 'natural' carry inaccurate labelling, inconsistent CBD concentrations, or undisclosed THC levels, the doctor warns, "creating risks around contamination, drug interactions, and self-medication". According to him, patients are increasingly using these products for chronic pain, anxiety, and epilepsy without clinical oversight, "while the lack of standardised physician training on cannabinoid medicine in India continues to widen a critical healthcare knowledge gap".

Dr Seema Dhir, unit head and senior consultant for internal medicine at Artemis Hospital, also acknowledges that there are good reasons to be concerned about the increased availability of cannabinoid products. "The idea that natural can mean safe is misleading," she warns. "The composition and dosage of many products are not standardised, which results in inconsistent effects," says Dr Dhir, adding that the interactions with other medicines are often missed. "Self-medication without proper diagnosis can delay treatment of serious conditions. Without clinical guidance and quality control, widespread availability may lead to misuse, incorrect dosing and preventable health complications," she warns.

"The market is rising full of promise as well as risks," says Dr Deeksha Kalra, associate consultant, psychiatry, Artemis Hospitals. "It provides alternative treatments but can be abused and misinformation can be spread if not monitored."

Dr Kalra explains the role of the two cannabis components. "THC connects to receptors in the brain that affect mood and memory. It can make you happy and relaxed but it can also affect your thinking coordination and judgment. At higher doses, it can affect your state of mind and cause confusion and paranoia," she says. "CBD is more gentle, calming and non-intoxicating. There is no one perfect dose; it depends on body weight, tolerance and purpose. The safest way is to start with a very low dose, increase slowly and only use it under medical supervision."

Tolerance is subjective

Tolerances vary widely between individuals. "It is also affected by body weight and metabolism, genetics and prior exposure to cannabis," explains Dr Kalra. "Regular users tend to develop higher tolerance needing more to get the same effect. Age, mental health status and overall health also play a role."

"What works at 25mg for one patient may be ineffective or overstimulating for another, which is why cannabis should be viewed as a precision-based therapeutic tool, not a universal wellness remedy," says Dr Chatterjee. "Cannabis compounds primarily act through the body's endocannabinoid system, a regulatory network spread across the brain, peripheral nervous system, and immune tissue. CB1 receptors influence pain perception, mood, memory, appetite, and sleep, while CB2 receptors help regulate inflammation and immune responses," he says. "This dual mechanism explains both the therapeutic potential of cannabinoids in conditions such as neuropathic pain and inflammation, and their broader neurological effects on attention, emotional regulation, and cognitive processing."

A recent review published by the Journal of the American Medical Association (JAMA) found that the evidence to support the use of cannabis and cannabinoids for most medical indications is insufficient. Dr Dhir shares that for regular users, "Short-term effects include relaxation, altered perception, drowsiness and sometimes impaired memory and coordination. Some users may also experience anxiety and heart palpitations." As for long-term effects, she lists, it can affect mental health and cognitive function particularly in younger individuals. "There is also the risk of dependence and the development of tolerance with time resulting in reduced effectiveness. The longer they take it without professional supervision the more likely they are to suffer psychological fallout."

Risks and benefits

Using unsupervised has many risks, says Dr Dhir. "The main risks are dizziness, impaired judgment, increased sedation and increased anxiety or mood problems. Higher doses can impact memory, coordination and concentration, increasing the risk of having accidents," she explains, adding that some people, especially those who are already at risk, may develop psychotic symptoms, and others with prolonged use can also develop a dependency on cannabis.

Dr Chatterjee says, "Cannabis-derived medicines may help in carefully selected cases such as chronic pain, chemotherapy-related nausea, resistant epilepsy, anxiety, and sleep disorders, but outcomes are highly individual." He stresses that unsupervised consumption is far from risk-free. "While CBD is generally well-tolerated, it can interact with blood thinners, anti-epileptics, immunosuppressants, and other medications by competing for liver enzymes, potentially raising drug levels to harmful ranges." Further, THC-related risks include impaired concentration, altered judgment, anxiety, paranoia, psychotic symptoms in vulnerable individuals, adverse effects from mislabelled products, and most severely cannabinoid hyperemesis syndrome, which refers to a disorder caused by long-term, frequent cannabis use, characterised by recurrent, severe nausea, vomiting, and abdominal pain.

As far as benefits go, he says, "CBD has shown clinically meaningful results in drug-resistant epilepsies, particularly Dravet and Lennox-Gastaut syndromes, along with palliative benefit in cancer-related pain." Expounding on the positive uses of cannabinoids, Dr Dhir says, "Some preparations work for some seizure disorders. Some people also experience better sleep and fewer muscle spasms," she adds. "It can provide comfort and symptom relief in palliative care settings."

Speaking of the cannabinoid medications that are sometimes prescribed for anxiety, insomnia and other mental health issues, Dr Kalra says, "Manufacturers should ensure product quality, clear labelling and transparency on THC and CBD content. These medications do not contain THC as CBD is the main therapeutic component in many of the medically approved formulations." The American Psychiatric Association does not stand by the use of cannabinoids in treating psychiatric disorder symptoms.

Regulations & guidelines

"In some cases, especially where conventional treatments failed, carefully monitored use offered mild relief. But not all of the outcomes are good," says Dr Kalra. "A few patients experienced greater anxiety, reliance on the drug and diminished attention."

Dr Chatterjee from Apollo states, "India's regulatory framework for cannabis-derived products remains fragmented despite existing oversight under the NDPS Act and AYUSH licensing norms. However, inconsistent compliance, poor labelling, and weak oversight continue to blur the line between evidence-based medicine and loosely regulated wellness products." According to him, better safeguards are needed around Certificate of Analysis (CoA) disclosures, standardised THC and CBD potency labelling, contamination testing and pharmacovigilance reporting, and structured physician prescribing protocols. Dr Dhir echoes, "Ideally guidelines should include strict quality control, accurate labelling of active components, clarity of dosage, contamination testing and access based on prescription."

Low B12 in parents poses risk for babies

A new study highlights that both mothers' and fathers' vitamin B12 levels around the time of conception may influence the risk of birth defects in their children. Higher vitamin B12 levels in both parents were associated with fewer birth defects overall, including congenital heart defects.

Gendered difference in diabetes health risks

A recent study found that women with type 2 diabetes were more likely to develop mental health conditions following diagnosis. Around 8.1% of women experienced such conditions, compared with 5.3% of men. Men showed higher rates of physical complications associated with type 2 diabetes.

Higher mortality rates with drug resistance

A study of infections caused by drug-resistant bacteria across India, conducted by ICMR has found that mortality rates and the cost of treatment are both significantly higher in cases of drug resistance. The study was based on hospital data and clinical experiences over the three years from 2022 and 2025.

Zinc for kids with sickle cell anemia

Daily zinc supplementation could provide a simple strategy for reducing infections in young children with sickle cell anaemia, according to findings from new study. Zinc plays an important role in immune function, and zinc deficiency has previously been reported in people with sickle cell disease.

NEW STUDIES SAY hormone replacement therapy given timely at menopause helps in better cognition and lower Alzheimer's risk. But does HRT not increase cancer risk? How does a woman choose? Dr Pakhee Aggarwal, senior consultant, gynae oncology, Indraprastha Apollo Hospital, Delhi, says: "HRT can have benefits, particularly in relieving symptoms such as hot flashes, night sweats and vaginal symptoms. However, it is not without risks. Some forms of HRT, particularly combined estrogen and progesterone therapy, have been associated with a small increase in breast cancer risk with longer use. The risks can vary depending on the type of HRT, dose, duration and a woman's individual health history. The decision should, therefore, be individualised. A woman should discuss her symptoms, age, time since menopause, family and personal medical history and other risk factors with her doctor. HRT should not be started only with the aim of preventing Alzheimer's disease, as more evidence is needed on this benefit."

Choosing HRT

New studies indicate cognition benefits of HRT

Ideally, who should get HRT, or is it for everybody?

HRT is not needed by every woman going through menopause. It is generally considered for women who have troublesome menopausal symptoms and, in some cases, for protection against bone loss.

It is usually considered to have a more favourable benefit-risk balance in healthy women who are below 60 years of age or within 10 years of menopause, provided there are no reasons to avoid it. Women who experience menopause at a younger age may also be advised HRT in appropriate cases.

The decision should always be made after an individual assessment rather than routinely recommending it to everyone.

What are the possible side effects of HRT?

Some women may experience breast tenderness, bloating, headaches or irregular bleeding, particularly when starting treatment. These symptoms may improve with time or after adjusting the treatment.

There are also potential longer-term risks, including blood clots and, depending on the type of HRT, a possible increase in breast cancer risk. The risks are different for different women and different HRT preparations, which is why regular review with a doctor is important.

Can certain foods or lifestyle changes act as a replacement for HRT?

There is no food or lifestyle measure that can directly replace HRT. However, lifestyle plays an important role in managing health during and after menopause.

Regular exercise, adequate sleep, maintaining a healthy weight, a balanced diet, avoiding smoking and limiting alcohol can support bone, heart and brain health. Some women may also find that identifying and avoiding triggers such as excessive heat, spicy foods or alcohol helps with hot flashes. Dietary supplements or herbal products should not automatically be considered safer alternatives to HRT, as their effectiveness and safety can vary.

The economy, its math and politics

27 was a 'lowly' 2.6%, and not 10.3% as estimated by the Ministry of Statistics and Programme Implementation. Adjusted for 2-2.5% inflation, he claimed the real growth rate will be zero and not the 'designer number' 7.8% estimated by the Ministry of Statistics and Programme Implementation (MoSPI). In doing so, Garg did something egregious. He definitely knows better than this, having played a key role in pushing through some of the most controversial agendas in the first term of the Narendra Modi government such as electoral bonds for political funding, and higher surplus transfers from RBI to the Centre. He elaborates on both these issues in his book We Also Make Policy.

Express that “there is a lot that is wrong with India’s economy... but the sheer math behind the 7.8% real GDP growth is not one of them, contrary to what a former government bureaucrat has claimed”.

CONCEPT 1: Need for a base year. Simply put, a base year is needed to understand if the economy or the GDP has indeed grown, adjusting for the impact of price rise. For example, let's assume Country X produces only crude oil, so the market value of its crude oil becomes its GDP. Say, in year 1, it produces 10 million barrels of crude oil and sells it for $10 a barrel; its GDP will be $100 million (10 million barrels X $10 / barrel). In year 2, it produces only 5 million barrels, and oil prices have risen to $30 a barrel. So, its GDP will be $150 million (5 million barrels X $30 / barrel). So, even though the country has produced less oil, its GDP has risen 50% from $100 million to $150 million.

base year). So, in this example, the GDP has shrunk by 50% to $50 million from $100 million.

CONCEPT 2: Why the base year is changed. Products and services on which people spend money today, be it food and clothes or travel and entertainment, has changed significantly from a decade ago. As years roll by, the market value of products and services change. So does technology and methodology, that enable a more precise and fast capture of output and prices. The base year is changed to account for all these. And when the base year changes, the GDP values naturally change, and growth is calculated by considering the new GDP values of two comparable periods.

Pakistan cricket shooting itself in the foot

The Pakistan Cricket Board (PCB) took issue with the broadcast of a conversation with Imran's two sons during the lunch break on the first day of the recent Lord's Test. There were reports that the option of pulling out of the Test and the remainder of the tour was also considered.

Knee-jerk reaction

The PCB's decision of calling as many as seven players back home from the tour, and sending five uncapped players as replacements, is a new low even by the PCB's own mercurial standards. Even the coach and his assistant have been recalled, with two foreigners sent to take their place. The players in the original squad would have been chosen, presumably, because they were the best in the country. And if the best in Pakistan — even if they were not up to the desired level in English conditions — can't do the job, what chance do the replacements have, especially when they know that patience at the highest echelons of the PCB is in short supply and they are not likely to get many opportunities. If they had much chance of success, they would have been in England from the beginning of the tour. The two players being portrayed as the main fall-guys are Mohammad Rizwan and Imam-ul-Haq. Rizwan has been culpable for his shoddy shot selection and glove-work, while being considered a bad influence in the team environment, according to reports. Imam's conduct during the Lord's Test, where he purported to tear his calf muscle while fielding and didn't bat in either inning of the game, has prompted many raised eyebrows. His batting may or may not have made any difference to the outcome of the match, but one has seen players coming out on the field with more debilitating injuries. Imam is being shown as a symbol of the biggest ailments in Pakistan cricket and his cricketing future, at least in the short and medium term, seems uncertain, despite him being the hero of legend and former captain Inzamam-ul-Haq. Especially, as it's not the first such instance with him. That raises the question: why were such players, who are said to have a bad attitude, selected for such a high-profile tour in the first place.

Britain's King Charles III meets members of the Pakistan National Cricket Team at Clarence House in London

Show common sense

But making a spectacle after two defeats and washing one's dirty linen in public serves no purpose. These issues could have been dealt with after the series, once the team returned home. The series was already lost. Drop the two errant players by all means – even if Imam somehow, miraculously, regains full fitness by the time the third Test begins in Birmingham on September 19 – and anyone else who has underperformed. But these have to be cricketing decisions, and not intended to teach someone a lesson. The PCB selection panel that picked the squad was said to be one of the most experienced in terms of having played top-level cricket, and the desertions have started with former Pakistan captain Misbah-ul-Haq resigning. Clearly, the decisions taken after the Lord's Test have come from the higher reaches of the administration. The PCB has hardly ever been known for farsightedness and clear thinking. The cricket team has, more often than not, flourished when strong captains have been at the helm — such as Imran, Javed Miandad, Wasim Akram and Misbah himself. The current lot can't hold a candle to them, either in on-field performances or force of personality. Babar Azam hadn't been a big success in his first stint as captain. The fact that he had to be re-appointed alludes to the paucity of options. There

otaincy, pulling in action, ng the of the es at posal ften stronger s down not having extraordinarily talented players punching above their weight. Smart captaincy, everyone pulling in one direction, and making the best use of the resources at their disposal have often brought stronger opponents down. But that will only happen when the board isn't looking to deflect responsibility and trying to make political gestures on behalf of the government. Headline management and looking for scapegoats can't compensate for clear thinking, foresight and taking the right decisions at the opportune times.

COOMI KAPOOR

Outsiders unwelcome

Diplomatic insiders in both Delhi and Bangladesh see a powerful lobby in the external affairs ministry playing a part in thwarting efforts to bring about a rapprochement in Indo-Bangladesh ties. The MEA is perhaps upset over Modi's appointment of a non-IFS officer, politician Dinesh Trivedi, as India's High Commissioner to Bangladesh. In a meeting with Indian envoys earlier this year, Modi hinted at more non-IFS ambassadorial appointments in our neighbourhood. Trivedi's efforts at bridging the growing gulf between the neighbours, even persuading Bangladesh PM Tarique Rahman to agree to dates for a visit to India, was not appreciated by all. After the dates leaked, the MEA acted as a spoiler. Ignoring conventional foreign policy protocol, it permitted Sheikh Hasina to hold a virtual press conference at Delhi's Foreign Correspondents Club, where she attacked her country's government. (It is pertinent to note that a year ago, the MEA stymied a proposed Hasina press conference at the Delhi Press Club and in 2018, denied permission to a British emissary to speak on behalf of late Khaleda Zia, then jailed in Bangladesh.) Belatedly, two weeks after a Hasina press conference, when the FCC tried to organise a foreign policy seminar which had speakers with alleged Awami League links, the government ordered its cancellation and some 50 policemen descended on the club premises!)

Incidentally, the MEA's non-conciliatory tone is echoed by some former Indian diplomats in articles, suggesting Rahman's visit was in fact called off because of internal differences within Bangladesh over its foreign policy direction towards India. Embittered feelings on both sides indicate Rahman is unlikely to attend the BRICS summit in Delhi.

Divisions at home

The Home Ministry is on the back-foot after the police overreach towards CJP student protesters. However, just a month after the much-criticised July police crackdown, Cabinet Secretary Dr T V Somanathan and Home Secretary Govind Mohan, who were both due to retire this month, were given a year's extension. The extensions are believed to reflect the PM's appreciation of the two senior officials' mature decision to refuse to succumb to political pressure that called for more stringent action during the Jantar Mantar agitation. The Home Secretary reportedly helped salvage the situation by halting the firing of pellets, a draconian measure which backfired badly. He was backed by the Cabinet Secretary. The Delhi Police's harsh methods were adopted within three days of the abrupt transfer of commissioner Satish Golcha, who was replaced by Anurag Kumar, the Intelligence Bureau special director, in the belief that his background would help in dispersing the restive students. In fact, the reverse happened, the confrontation escalated. A fallout of the Jantar Mantar debacle is that officials are increasingly requesting for written ministerial orders.

Unfair clubbing together

BJP MPs who decry what they term as Delhi's Lutyens culture have little sympathy for the government's eviction notice to the Gymkhana Club. They think club culture is perpetrated to make those excluded feel like lesser mortals. A minister recalls when he came to Delhi years ago as a visitor in connection with a case in the Supreme Court, he was taken by his lawyer to the India International Centre for tea. He was made to feel like an outsider and suspected it was because he did not speak in English. His prejudice against the IIC may be misconceived, and the comparison unfair. The IIC membership criteria is based on a prospective candidate's professional accomplishments and an interest in foreign affairs, while the complaint against the Gymkhana is its entrenched hereditary membership and elitism.

Non-Parsis' exclusion

There was an interesting subplot in the tussle for control of the Tata empire. Some months ago, when then trustee Mehli Mistry raised the issue of the 1923 deed of the Bai Hiralbai Tata Charitable Foundation which stipulates that all trustees should be Parsis, the assumption was that he was merely targeting the two non-Parsi trustees, Venu Srinivasan and Vijay Singh. But some Parsis suspected he might also be hinting at Noel Tata. As Naval Tata's son, Noel's Parsi credentials should be impeccable, but a few old-timers quibbled that Noel's late mother-in-law Simone Dunoyer, was a Christian. They could not recall a young Noel's navjote ceremony, the initiation rite for being inducted into the faith. In fact, there is no ambiguity about Noel's standing as a Parsi. Before his marriage to tycoon Shapoorji Pallonji Mistry's daughter, Aloo, the conservative and deeply religious Shapoorji insisted that his prospective son-in-law go through the navjote ritual before the wedding.

A proposed system would use data to map groundwater, avoid duplication and improve MGNREGA (VB-G RAM G) works. But technology must inform Gram Sabhas, not replace their knowledge of what villages actually need

VENKY RAMACHANDRAN

INDIA IS PREPARING to change the way its villages decide what to build with rural jobs funds – under what was MNREGA and is now the VB-G RAM G Act – including water works and disaster planning, both of which are assuming critical importance due to climate change. The biggest change lies in who decides what a village needs.

The Ministry of Rural Development, working with German development agency GIZ, published the Draft Framework for the Viksit Gram Panchayat Plan in June 2026 under the "Support to India's WaterVision 2047" project. (Viksit Bharat is the government's vision to make India a fully developed nation by the year 2047, which marks 100 years of Independence.) The framework proposes a more scientific, geospatially enabled approach to planning works across India's roughly 2.5 lakh Gram Panchayats. At the heart of the proposal is Yuktidhara, a GIS-based geospatial planning portal launched in 2021 to facilitate village-level planning and asset creation under the Mahatma Gandhi National Rural Employment Guarantee Act (MGNREGA). It draws on datasets from platforms including PM Gati Shakti (for transport and logistics), India-WRIS (for water) and Bhuvan (satellite research).

The system will conduct a gap assessment and generate a shortlist of possible works, including proposed coordinates, site boundaries and dimensions. Planning teams will then take these recommendations to hamlets, where Gram Sabhas are expected to 'ground truth' them and validate, refine and prioritise interventions based on local needs and conditions. This sequence could fundamentally change the relationship between technology and local democracy. The algorithm identifies what could be built. The Gram Sabha reviews it.

A more scientific way to plan?

The case for better planning is difficult to dispute. The draft framework identifies 318 permissible works across 72 categories. Water security alone accounts for 107 options, while core rural infrastructure has 88, rural livelihoods 86 and disaster

Wetland data is from 2005. The Waste Land layer dates to 2008-09.

What happens when Yuktidhara tells a Gram Panchayat in 2026 that degraded wasteland is available for plantation, based on a land classification generated in 2008-09? The problem is not merely that the data may be old. It is that some categories are themselves difficult to interpret from a satellite. "Wasteland" is a particularly loaded example.

Land that appears unused on a map may be grazing land, fallow land or a community resource that supports livelihoods. A satellite can see the land, but not necessarily who uses it. A 2024 field study of digital planning tools for rural water security found that Bhuvan's thematic layers could be spatially coarse and insufficiently updated. It also found that government staff were not always trained to use the available tools, while civil society field staff sometimes had to source higher-resolution data elsewhere.

The Gram Sabha must not become a rubber stamp

The new framework is trying to solve a real problem: rural planning has often been fragmented, poorly documented and vulnerable to local capacity constraints. But there is a difference between using technology to improve democratic decision-making and using technology to make the decision before democracy has a say. The new system gives the algorithm a privileged position. Its recommendations become the starting point for discussion, while the Gram Sabha is asked to validate, refine and prioritise them. This can work, but only if "ground truthing" means real scrutiny. A Gram Sabha must be able to reject a recommendation because the data is wrong, incomplete or blind to a local reality. It must be able to add something that does not exist in the database. And it must be able to propose something that the algorithm did not identify. Otherwise, the process risks producing a peculiar inversion of decentralised planning: a system in which the State's datasets decide what a village needs and villagers are invited to correct the dataset.

India does not need to choose between algorithms and Gram Sabhas. It needs to decide what each is good at. An algorithm can identify patterns that are difficult for people to see. It can map groundwater systems, identify duplication, analyse spatial gaps and bring consistency to planning across thousands of villages. A Gram Sabha can know that the "wasteland" on a map is where cattle graze. It can know that a proposed water structure will fail because villagers tried it before. It can know which hamlet has been repeatedly overlooked or which asset matters more than the model suggests. The success of India's new rural planning system should, therefore, not be measured by how much decision-making it takes away from the village. It should be measured by whether technology gives villagers better information with which to make decisions.

When algorithms start proposing MGNREGA PLANS

ter mitigation 37. The scale and specificity of the catalogue are part of the framework's attempt to move away from what it describes as traditional demand-based or "wish-list" planning towards a system based on data and resource optimisation.

There is good reason to think the old system needed fixing. The last all-India CAG performance audit of MGNREGA, covering April 2007 to April 2013 – over a decade ago – examined 3,848 Gram Panchayats across 182 districts, 458 blocks, 28 states and four Union Territories. It found that in 1,201 sampled Gram Panchayats across 11 states, about 31% had either not prepared an annual plan or had prepared one incompletely. In three states, including Andhra Pradesh, none of the sampled Gram Panchayats had prepared a plan.

District labour budgets were missing in 49 districts. Where plans existed, projected employment generation was sometimes absent, while many plans contained neither a shelf of works nor a list of assets to be created. The time taken for a Gram Panchayat plan to reach the block also varied dramatically, from one to 21 months. And plans often bore little relationship to what eventually happened on the ground, the audit found. Across 14 states and one

Union Territory, 129.22 lakh works worth ₹1,26,961 crore were approved in annual plans during the period of the audit. Only 38.65 lakh, about 30%, were completed. Meanwhile, nearly 5,000 works were executed outside the annual plans in 25 districts across nine states.

There was another problem: the people and institutions responsible for implementing MGNREGA did not always have the capacity to do so.

The Gram Rozgar Sevak, or GRS, is the village-level functionary responsible for functions including registration, job cards, work allocation, wage payments and social audits. The CAG found vacancy rates for GRS posts ranging from 20% in Uttar Pradesh to 93% in Punjab. Four states, including Tamil Nadu and Kerala, had no dedicated GRS at all. In Uttar Pradesh, 74% of the money allocated for training these staff remained unspent. The democratic mechanism at the centre of the planning process has its own weaknesses. Studies of Gram Sabha participation have routinely found attendance in the low double digits. This creates a powerful argument for bringing better information into village planning. But it also creates a danger. If Gram Sabhas are already functioning imperfectly, will an algorithm strengthen their ability to make decisions, or simply make their role more ceremonial?

Where data could help

There are areas where this could be a significant improvement. Groundwater is an example. The framework proposes minimum expenditure on water-related works based on groundwater status: 65% in over-exploited and critical blocks, 40% in semi-critical blocks and 30% in safe blocks. A farmer may know that a borewell is failing. But groundwater systems do not follow Gram Panchayat boundaries. An aquifer can extend across several villages, making a wider spatial picture essential to planning. GIS could also help address duplication. GeoMGNREGA has geotagged more than three crore assets since the exercise began in 2016. If Yuktidhara can identify an existing percolation tank a few hundred metres from a proposed new one, that is useful information that a local planning meeting may not have.

The framework's treatment of maintenance is another potentially important correction. Of the 318 permissible works, 97 are repair and maintenance works. This could help address a longstanding incentive problem in rural public works: building something new creates employment, photographs and political visibility. Repairing an existing check dam or restoring a neglected water structure produces less visible credit. Giving maintenance its own place in the planning framework could change that incentive.

The technology, therefore, is not the problem. In some cases, it may be precisely what the planning process needs.

But can a map see the village?

The problem begins with the data. The draft framework's list of data layers reveals a striking mismatch between the age of some of the underlying information and the ambition of the planning system. The framework cites relatively recent satellite imagery, including high-resolution one-metre data from 2022 to 2024 and LISS-IV data from 2025 (LISS-IV refers to ISRO's Linear Imaging Self-Scanning Sensor-4), a high-resolution multispectral optical camera system for detailed Earth observation and land mapping). But several interpretation layers are much older. The Land Use Land Cover layer is from 2015-16. Land Degradation data is also from 2015-16. Geomorphology data dates to 2005-06.

● ENVOYS TO VISIT KYIV TODAY

Russia, Ukraine halt strikes as US envoys arrive for talks

Kushner, Witkoff in Moscow in new push for peace

REUTERS
Moscow, September 5

US SPECIAL REPRESENTATIVES Steve Witkoff and Jared Kushner arrived in Moscow on Saturday for talks on ending the war in Ukraine, with the warring sides offering to curtail attacks during the discussions.

Russian spokesman Dmitry Peskov told TASS news agency that President Vladimir Putin would meet Witkoff and Kushner in the Kremlin later on Saturday. The US envoys are then expected to visit Kyiv the following day. US President Donald Trump suggested the US had a fresh concrete proposal aimed at ending the war, which is now in its fifth year. He did not, however, elaborate on what that proposal would be.

Witkoff and Kushner landed

Russian presidential envoy Kirill Dmitriev greets US envoys Jared Kushner, Steve Witkoff in Moscow on Saturday

at Moscow's governmental airport where they were met by Russian presidential envoy Kirill Dmitriev. A motorcade then took the three men into the city, a Reuters witness said.

Dmitriev, who told Reuters in June that he had remained in contact with the US negotiators during a pause in their visits to Russia, took part in all their previous meetings with Putin alongside Putin's foreign policy aide Yuri Ushakov. He also played a role in negotiating US sanction waivers for Russian oil this year.

Peskov said in a statement posted on the Kremlin's channel in Max messenger that Putin had ordered the military not to strike Kyiv for three days, starting at midnight on Saturday, in connection with Witkoff and Kushner's visit to the Ukrainian capital. Ukrainian President Volodymyr Zelenskyy said on Saturday he had spoken to the two US envoys. A source close to the Kremlin, speaking before reports emerged of a possible trip by President Trump's envoys, said Putin was still intent on capturing more territory. Western military analysts see such a possibility as remote, given Moscow's slow rate of progress. Ukraine refuses to surrender land that it has successfully defended at huge cost, and rejects such terms as tantamount to surrender. The Kremlin said the position that Putin set out in a speech two years ago — that Ukraine should cede the entire territory of four regions claimed by Russia and abandon its plan to join NATO — was "unshakeable".

US, China gear up for mid-Sept AI safety talks

REUTERS
Beijing, September 5

THE US AND China are gearing up to discuss AI safety risks during a dialogue planned for mid-September, two sources briefed on the discussions told Reuters, as rapidly advancing frontier AI capabilities reach a global tipping point.

The talks, the first official bilateral discussions devoted exclusively to AI between the US and China since US President Donald Trump took office for a second time, will be led by US Treasury Secretary Scott Bessent on the US side, the sources, who were briefed on the planning, said on condition of anonymity.

POWER DIALOGUE

■ Autonomous AI agent incidents add urgency to superpowers' talks

■ Washington wants joint monitoring of AI-driven cyberattacks, say sources

■ US worried about potential for a future Chinese Mythos-level model capable of cyberattacks

■ White House says no AI meeting currently planned

Reuters is reporting the tentative mid-September period for the first time. A White House official said

"there is currently no planned AI-related meeting in mid-September." Trump and Chinese President Xi Jinping are due to meet on September 24 during a summit in Washington. The US wants to discuss cooperation on monitoring AI-directed cyberattacks, and has floated a proposal to ask US and Chinese AI labs to "police themselves" and share information to prevent AI-linked cyberattacks, one of the sources said on condition of anonymity. Nearly 700 rogue AI agents built on OpenAI models hacked AI startup Hugging Face in July and attempted to cover their tracks by forging logs, OpenAI and cybersecurity researchers said last week, underscoring the risks of coordinated agent swarms acting autonomously

Anthropic IPO likely in mid-Oct

REUTERS
September 5

ANTHROPIC IS EXPECTED to begin marketing its initial public offering in mid-October at the earliest and complete the listing days before the US midterm elections in November, people familiar with the matter said. The artificial intelligence company had been expected to make its IPO prospectus public as early as next week, two of the people said, a crucial step that would kick off the final stages of the offering. Now that is not expected until late September, the people added, cautioning that the plans, including the timing, are subject to change. The shift pushes back what some investors have said could be a $2 trillion listing, one of the largest IPOs ever attempted and a major test of public-market appetite for the rapidly growing artificial intelligence industry.

As part of the IPO process, Anthropic is looking to finalise a $15 billion revolving credit facility, including those at banks involved in the financing, are expected to meet with the company, one of the people said.

US hits three Iranian oil tankers

ASSOCIATED PRESS
Cairo, September 5

THE US MILITARY on Saturday said it struck three Iranian oil tankers after Navy warships were targeted with missiles, warning that it would "if necessary, destroy Iran's limited and exposed oil fleet." The military's statement said a US aircraft carrier and a destroyer evaded "multiple unprovoked Iranian attacks" while patrolling in the region and no US personnel were hurt. It said two Iranian oil carriers were "permanently disabled" and the third, unladen one, was destroyed. The US statement said the tankers were part of a shadow network helping to fund Iran's Revolutionary Guard and its armed proxies in the region. Earlier, Iran accused the US of attacking an Iranian tanker near Kharg Island in the Persian Gulf.

for months undetected by humans. A swarm of rogue OpenAI agents hijacked a German website this spring and transformed it into a bulletin board for other AI agents, Reuters exclusively reported. "The talks between the two AI superpowers are coming at the most critical juncture," said Paul Triolo, a partner at DGA-Albright Stonebridge Group. "It is now or never."

Washington is worried about the potential for a future Chinese Mythos-level model with capabilities to conduct cyberattacks, and wants to bring up alleged Chinese distillation of proprietary US AI models, the source said.

Jaguar Land Rover to slash 4,000 jobs

BLOOMBERG
September 5

JAGUAR LAND ROVER Automotive is set to cut 4,000 jobs over the next two years as the UK's largest carmaker confronts soaring costs, plummeting sales and the effects of US tariffs, The Times reported.

Staff were warned to expect the announcement of the redundancy programme which is due to take place on Monday, according to The Times. In a statement to Bloomberg, the company said it is launching a voluntary redundancy program as it targets about £1.7 billion ($2.3 billion) in savings over two years. JLR wants to lower its break-even point to 300,000 vehicles and simplify its business in response to global market conditions, according to the statement. It didn't mention the number of job cuts planned. The carmaker, which employs about 33,000 people across the UK, is owned by India's Tata Motors Passenger Vehicles. The company's revenue fell nearly 10% in the most recent quarter with pretax profit dropping 69% to £109 million. The company's first electric Range Rover went on sale earlier this month for £154,070, one of the most expensive electric SUVs on the market and nearly £50,000 more than JLR's combustion-engine equivalent. The high price sets it further apart from cheaper SUVs coming out of China that are taking the UK by storm.

Investors are requested to note that, due to an inadvertent computational error, certain details relating to the Fresh Issue, Total Issue Size and post-issue market capitalisation of the Company at the Floor Price of ₹130 per Equity Share, as appearing in the Price Band Advertisement, were inadvertently incorrectly stated.

The Issue comprises a Fresh Issue aggregating up to ₹ 21,000.00 lakh. Accordingly, all references in the Price Band Advertisement to the number of Equity Shares comprising the Fresh Issue and the Total Issue Size at the Floor Price, the post-Issue number of Equity Shares, the post-Issue market capitalisation at the Floor Price, the post-Issue shareholding percentages at the Floor Price and the NAV per Equity Share after completion of the Issue at the Floor Price, and all other calculations directly derived therefrom, shall be read as corrected pursuant to this Corrigendum.
